

The Thirteenth Annual Washington Energy Policy Conference

New Energy Dynamics—Recession and Beyond

Monday, April 27, 2009

Kenney Auditorium, Nitze School of Advanced International Studies,
Johns Hopkins University, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue, NW

New questions have arisen as Congress and the new administration advance an aggressive energy and environment agenda to address global warming and energy security concerns. The global recession has added challenges and opportunities to the debate. Policy must also navigate concerns around employment, rising government debt, and reservations about market based solutions. How will the U.S. and other nations secure an economically stable and environmentally sustainable energy future? What are the prospects for a rapid increase in renewable electricity and a “Smart Grid”? What is the potential for reducing the use of oil in transportation? How will oil and gas exporting nations respond? What is the likely path for climate policy in the U.S. and how will it affect what kind of agreement can be expected in Copenhagen?

Join with leaders from government, industry, non-profits, and academia to discuss these issues at the 13th Annual Washington Energy Policy Conference. See the full agenda on the next page.

Conference Sponsors:

The Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) is a graduate division of the Johns Hopkins University, offering advanced degrees in international affairs. This conference is co-sponsored by the Global Energy and Environment Initiative (GEEI) of SAIS.
